The following questions are frequently asked in preschool interviews. Each one targets a specific competency. Use these examples to structure your preparation.

Tell Us About Yourself and Your Experience

This opening question sets the tone for the entire interview. While it seems straightforward, it is your opportunity to tell a story. Avoid simply reciting your resume. Instead, connect your background to your passion for early childhood education. You might say something like, "I have always been drawn to the wonder of early learning. For the past four years, I have worked with three and four year olds, focusing on play-based curriculum and social-emotional development." This response immediately signals that you understand the core values of preschool teaching.

What Is Your Philosophy of Early Childhood Education?

This is one of the most critical interview questions for a preschool teacher. Your answer reveals your teaching identity. You do not need to name a specific educational theorist, but you should demonstrate a clear, thoughtful approach. For example, you might emphasize the importance of learning through play, child-led exploration, and creating a classroom that feels like a second home. A strong answer will be concise but meaningful. You could say, "I believe children learn best when they feel safe, respected, and engaged. My classroom balances structured activities with free exploration, allowing each child to develop at their own pace."

How Do You Handle a Child Who Is Having a Tantrum?

Behavior management is a daily reality in preschool. Interviewers want to know that you can remain calm, empathetic, and effective. Describe a specific strategy or a step-by-step approach. You might discuss recognizing the child's feelings, offering choices, and providing a calm-down space. For instance: "I first ensure the child and others are safe. I then get down to their eye level and use a calm voice. I acknowledge their feelings, saying something like, 'I see you are very upset because you want to keep playing.' Then I offer a simple choice or a comforting activity." This demonstrates both compassion and practical skill.

How Do You Incorporate Different Learning Styles in Your Classroom?

Preschoolers learn in many ways. Some are visual, some are kinesthetic, and others are auditory. A thoughtful answer shows that you plan for diversity. You could discuss using songs for learning the alphabet, movement activities for counting, and art projects for exploring themes. Explain that you rotate activities to reach every child. This response highlights your instructional planning and your commitment to inclusive teaching.

Behavioral Questions in Preschool Interviews

Behavioral questions ask you to share specific examples from your past experience. They are based on the idea that past behavior predicts future performance. These questions are common among interview questions for a preschool teacher because they reveal how you act in real situations.

Describe a Time You Handled a Difficult Parent Conversation

Parent communication is a core part of preschool teaching. When answering, use the STAR method. Describe the Situation, the Task you faced, the Action you took, and the Result.
